A. Warm-Up Questions

1. What language do you speak at home?
2. When did you start to learn English?
3. Do you ever mix your native language with English when you are speaking?
4. How many people around the world do you think speak English as a second language?
5. Have you ever heard the terms “Spanglish” or “Hinglish”? What do you think these terms mean?
6. What is the meaning of globalization?

Reading

- Take turns to read each paragraph
- Review new words

1. Today, the English language is spoken as a second language by more people than ever before. In 2006, for every native English speaker, there were estimated to be three non-native English speakers.
2. English is now the language of business, computer technology, and skilled employment worldwide. Currently, hundreds of millions of people, especially in China and India, are learning to speak English, many of them in small local language schools. Some experts predict that English will be one of only three languages (also Spanish and Mandarin) that doesn't die out by the end of this century.
3. Many non-English-speaking countries now start to teach their children English in school at a young age. This not only helps the children to learn English but also to get better jobs when they are older. A country that has workers who have both English and computer skills is better able to compete in the global marketplace.
4. English is also the language of the Internet. Many people work in the field of Internet technology, while many others use the Internet to help them do their jobs or to improve their English skills.
5. As more non-native speakers have learned English, words from local languages have become mixed with it. For example, Spanglish, a mix of Spanish and English, is now spoken in the United States and Mexico. Hinglish, a mix of Hindi and English, is becoming more common in India.
6. In fact, some experts think that people could one day speak one kind of English at home, another at work or school, and a third while traveling or talking to international visitors. Other experts believe that countries should encourage local versions of English.
7. Some native English speakers are upset at these changes. However, they will have to adapt to them because the globalization of English has become a fact of life. The highly lucrative English as a second language teaching industry and the demand for native English speakers will continue to grow for some time to come.

"A different language is a different vision of life."

—Federico Fellini, Italian film director and screenwriter

LEARNING A LANGUAGE

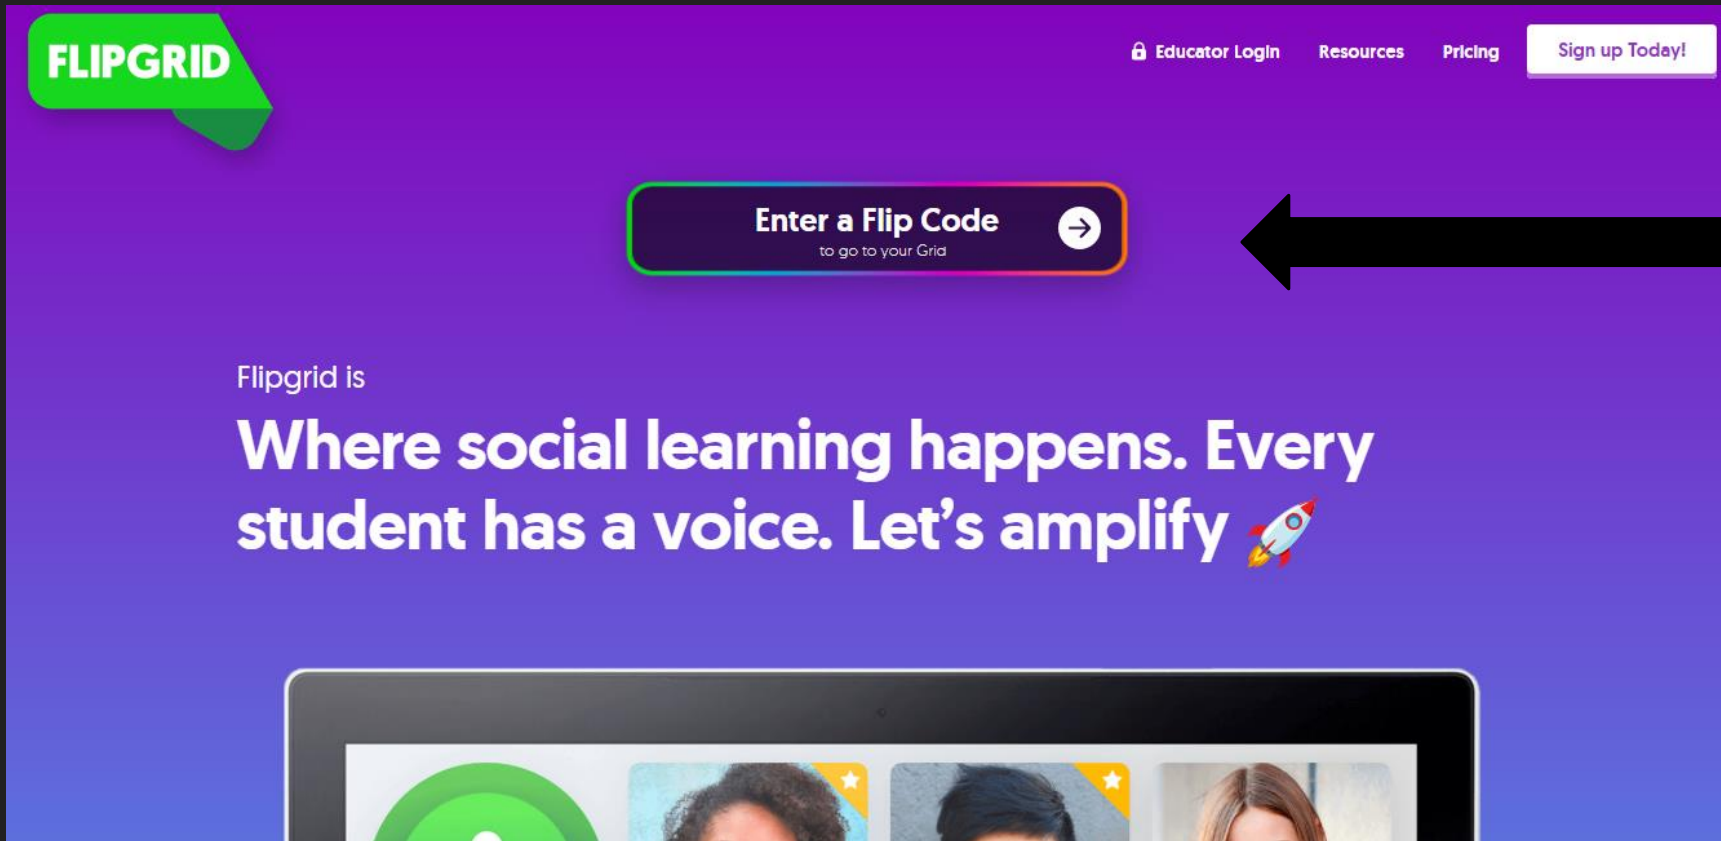

Posted on January 8, 2017 by kieranodonaghy

This ELT lesson plan is designed around a short film commissioned by Allegro, a Polish online shopping auction platform and the theme of learning a new language. Students discuss why they are learning English, come up with reasons why people learn a new language and the benefits of learning a new language, watch a short film and discuss ways to improve their language learning.
